Mounted Patrol has been patrolling on horseback around the Northwest since the late 1800s. While they can take off any time, they make sure to protect the public, "especially the little guys," said chief horse officer Bob Degenhart. livestock to calving grounds. In the north, the state of Oregon expects the annual production of wheat to drop 17 percent, barley 4 percent and other fields may be cut in half, according to the Oregon Department of Agriculture. "It's not a pretty outlook, especially considering the fact that the Northwest is such an agricultural area," said Oregon State University Extension Service for Crops and Water. As a result, ranchers have rushed to plant crops and have seen excellent early response to the seeds. "I've seen some really good grain fields, which is a bit unusual for this time of the year," said David Powers, an extension service for Crops and Water agent based in Pendleton, Ore. "It's not quite the same, but it's still a good show of progress," he said. Powers added, "The early results will be a great relief for Oregonians, and will help to make up for the poor crops of 2011." It could take three to six weeks for growers to see 82157476af
